He says: "Last summer I had a very severe attack of flu. I tried almost every known remedy, none giving relief. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy was recommended to me. I purchased a bottle and received almost immediate relief. I continued to use the medicine and was entirely cured. I take pleasure in recommending this remedy to any person suffering with such a disease, as in my opinion it is the best medicine in existence. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by St. Bernard Drug Store, Earlington; Ben T. Piles or Hemorrhoids.

This uncomfortable disease is the direct result of constipation. The hard matter in the intestines presses upon the veins, and finally engorges them in certain places with blood. Whoever has suffered from piles knows how painful and troublesome they are. To cure them we must abolish the cause, which is constipation. The patient and intelligent use of Carlsbad's German Liver Powder will do it. In old and chronic cases some little time may be required, but the good result is sure to follow. The family tutor was invited to a grand dinner party by his employers, and surveyed with intense satisfaction the half-dozen wine-glasses arranged in front of his plate. The footman came around with the wine. The young man presented the smallest of the glasses. "It is vin ordinaire," observed the waiter. "Ah! precisely," replied our ascetic philosopher; "I am reserving the larger glasses for the finer sorts."—La Chronique Bourgeoise.

"I think I could," answered the man at the desk, drawing a silver dollar from his pocket, looking fondly at the coin and dropping it back again. "But I'm not going to do it."

"Keep it?" rejoined the greasy collar in a husky voice. "Keep it! It's only worth forty-eight cents!"—Chicago Tribune.

"Certainly! it was when he called the plaintiff a liar and a scoundrel!"—Detroit Free Press.

THE ART OF DARNING.

The Lapso is One of the Best Tende-ment of the Modern Housekeeper.

Darning seems almost in danger of becoming a lost art. With the cheap price of clothing to-day many people find it easier to buy the new than to mend the old. While such a spirit of wastefulness is certainly to be deplored, it is true that in olden days a great deal of time which modern housekeepers can ill-afford to waste in mending was spent in mending. For in spite of all the improvements in modern life, labor-saving machines have not kept pace with the added duties of the modern housekeeper.

While it is true that the modern housekeeper is a much happier and wiser woman than her grandmother, she is not apt to be so skillful in purely manual tasks. It is a matter of regret that children are not taught mending and the art of needlework as carefully as they were in the olden time. It is a rare thing for a young girl to be able to make a neat darn in cloth. She should use the ravelings of the goods wherever it is possible to do so or a sewing silk exactly matching the cloth. There the cloth is very thick and heavy it will not be necessary to put a second piece of cloth under it, but the edges of the cloth can be woven together, and when pressed the darned spot will be practically invisible. Where the cloth is thin, a piece of cloth exactly matching it or a piece of the cloth itself should be placed under it to strengthen the stitches.

In the mending of kid gloves a piece of silk exactly matching the gloves should be placed under the seam where they split and the glove drawn together over this silk, that it may serve as a stay to the seam. This will make a neat as well as strong seam, for the silk remains invisible. The darning of this muslin or tissue is one of the most delicate matters. For the fine muslin, a thread about the same size as the thread of the goods should be chosen, and the darn should be woven together so as to match the weave of the goods. This must be done very firmly and thoroughly, as no stay can be put under it.

The darning of stockings is an art in which every girl should be taught from her childhood, as there is no mechanical means by which it may be performed, and it is the most important part of the mending of every family. A natural of great importance in this part of the work is the darning of the stocking. The darning of the stocking should be chosen in the same quality as the stocking. It is not an uncommon thing to see a coarse, heavy quality of cotton used for darning up the stockings, which is a mistake. It makes the work clumsy and ugly and shows a slovenly manner.—N. Y. Tribune.

WOMEN SHOULD KEEP BOOKS.

It encourages habits of Economy and Good Judgment. Whether a woman is poor or rich it behooves her to acquire methodical habits of keeping her accounts, and to keep them accurately and knowing to a cent just what she does with her money, whether she has ten cents or ten dollars to expend on her own little personal wants. An allowance is the first step toward this end, if at the same time it is impressed upon her that every cent spent should be set down with unfailing regularity. In black and white notes how much more easily the money can be spent, how quickly it goes and just what foolish little things have lured it from her pockets.

Without setting down each item it is ten chances to one that you will conclude that you must have lost some money when you can not see how that ten-dollar bill went when you only bought such a few things. The neat little figures are a genuine restraint, besides instilling a habit and system that will be of great value if fortune ever smiles and a great estate comes to your hands, and still greater if economy is a necessity, and the dollar has to be forced into doing duty for two.

Unless the accounts are kept accurately, and cash made to balance every evening, you had better not attempt any book-keeping at all, for slipshod methods are worse than none, and they confuse everything rather than help matters. If anything is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well, and there is nothing so productive of future good as the habit of looking carefully out for the pennies when school days are the only trials and the allowance of fifty cents a week goes for candy and pickles. If this plan is once established in childhood, the girl will grow to womanhood with a clear knowledge of where her money goes and what she has to show for it.—Baltimore Herald.

President Buchanan's Boyhood.

James Buchanan, afterward president of the United States, was born in Franklin county, Pa., in 1791, in a wild mountain gorge called "Stony Blatter." His father was a Scotch trader, lived in one cabin and had a store in another where he carried on a profitable traffic with Indians and frontiersmen. Little James, with his bright blue eyes and fair, white skin, led a happy life; but it must have had its drawbacks. The mountains were infested with bears, wild cats and panthers, and it was dangerous even for grown persons to venture too far without a gun. So Mrs. Buchanan, when engaged in household duties or assisting the father in attending to the customers in the store, used to put a cow bell around James's neck in the morning, so that she could find him if he strayed away. To fancy the future president toddling around with a cow bell on his neck requires a strong imagination; but the story is well founded.—Golden Days.

BURIALS OF THE UTES.

Fetters Mortuary Customs of the Montezuma Indians.

Up to a very recent period the Indian tribes living on the plains were accustomed to place their dead on scaffolds, which were erected in trees. It was not until these resting places began to be desecrated by the whites, in order to obtain the costly trinkets that were often wrapped up with the bodies, that our own method of burying in the ground was adopted. Their funeral ceremonies are very elaborate, often lasting days. The dead are mounted in Indians, quite different in appearance and customs from the plains tribes. If one of their number is afflicted with a mortal sickness the white man is excluded from his presence and often from the village. After death such of his property as he has not disposed of by will is destroyed, there is no funeral sermon whatever, and all traces of the final resting place of the remains are carefully concealed. It is only by accident that the details of the Ute customs in regard to their dead have been discovered.

The moment life is extinct the body is wrapped in a blanket, placed across a pony's back, and taken to some remote place which has previously been decided upon. A steep bluff or hill is a favorite spot, and if a natural cave or cleft can not be found an artificial one is made by digging, and is afterward lined with stones and cemented with clay. The body is placed inside and the opening walled up and plastered on the outside with mud. If on a hill side, dry earth is then thrown over the whole for concealment. The footprints of the returning party are then carefully covered up, and the Utes can never afterward be induced to talk to the white man of the dead or his grave. Occasionally, however, in traveling through the mountains of western Colorado human bones will be found at the base of some almost inaccessible declivity, and investigation reveals the fact that the rain has washed out a Ute tomb or grave. In such a case it would not be well for a member of the tribe to find a white man making an exploration, for the latter's life would probably pay the penalty.

About ten years ago Oursay, the chief of the ten or twelve tribes of the federated Utes, and a man of great strength of character and influence, fell sick while on a visit to the southern Ute agency. The Indian medicine men took sole charge of him, keeping off the white doctors, of whom there were several present. The latter, however, gained access to the sick man's tepee long enough to find out that he was hopelessly afflicted with Bright's disease. After death the funeral ceremony, or rather the lack of it, was just the same as if an ordinary brave had died. It was only when Oursay's own tribe, the Uncompagne Utes, requested the removal of his remains to his old home, that the funeral ceremony was observed.
